

The Claims

1. A device for transdermal drug delivery, comprising a skin patch having a plurality of drug reservoirs arranged in a matrix, serving to divide the area of contact with the skin into a plurality of smaller areas.
2. A method of delivering a drug, comprising applying the drug transdermally to a plurality of locations arranged in a matrix on the skin of a recipient.
3. The method of Claim 2 in which the drug is applied by means of a skin patch having a plurality of drug reservoirs arranged in a matrix, serving to divide the area of contact with the skin into a plurality of smaller areas.